Liddell joins Adams Harris as National Practice Director of Technology Services

June 14, 2007 (Chicago, IL) – Adams Harris, Inc., the internal audit, accounting, tax and technology risk management services firm headquartered in Chicago, announced today that Maurice J. Liddell has joined the firm as the National Practice Director of Technology Services.

“I believe Maurice is an excellent choice to lead and develop our Technology Services Practice,” said Adams Harris co-founder and Chief Operating Officer, Rob Dennison. “He has impressive experience in implementing strategy, business and technical solutions for a myriad of clients,” said Dennison.

Liddell, joins Adams Harris from Eagle Global Logistics where he was the Director of Global Information Technology. Before that, he was the Director of Technology Services for several other consulting firms and was a Service Lead in the Jefferson Wells Houston office. Liddell holds a Bachelor of Science Degree in Electrical Engineering from the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology.

“I believe that my strong communication skills and dedication to exceeding client expectations make me a good fit for Adams Harris,” said Liddell. “This is a business model that I really embrace, from the wide range of services to the reasonable billing rates. The founders of Adams Harris have the experience and drive to bring value back to the professional services market, and I am pleased to be a part of this exciting, new opportunity. I look forward to developing a skillful and thriving practice,” added Liddell.

“We are very pleased that Maurice has joined our leadership team,” said Mike Harris, co-founder and CEO of Adams Harris. “He possesses a robust technical background and considerable teambuilding and management skills,” added Harris.

Mike Harris, co-founder and CEO of Adams Harris, is no stranger to start-up and high growth companies. Adams Harris is his fifth professional services start-up since 1995. He is best known as the founder and former CEO of Jefferson Wells, which was sold to Manpower in 2001. He also started and sold Capital H Group, and co-founded SilverTrain and Novo Recruiting, where he continues to be active and serves on the Board of Directors. Dennison is also a former Jefferson Wells executive with significant internal auditing experience and leadership.
